• Coping with Unexpected Flight Delays •

Your group of pilgrims, along with their families, is about to board a flight to Madinah for Hajj. As you stand in the boarding queue, you realize that there is a sudden delay due to a technical issue. The airline staff announces that all flights have been postponed for several hours. Your pilgrims are traveling with elderly parents and young children, and the airport is crowded with other pilgrims. They begin to feel anxious. To make matters worse, the airline staff provides limited information, and communication is unclear. Some of the pilgrims start to become restless, and confusion spreads as people remain uncertain about when they will be allowed to board. —

Assisting a Questioned Pilgrim during Boarding

During the boarding or deboarding process for Haj flights, you notice that one of your fellow pilgrims has been stopped by the authorities for questioning. Other pilgrims request you to intervene and assist. How would you handle this situation?

Handling a Missing Passport and Cash Case

Upon arrival in Saudi Arabia, an elderly pilgrim traveling alone reports that their pouch containing cash and passport is missing. They recall boarding the flight with it, but it is neither at their seat nor in the overhead bin. The pilgrim is visibly tense and anxious. How—would you handle this situation?

Resolving Group Tensions Upon Arrival

You are part of a group of pilgrims, some from your home state and others from a neighbouring state. The group consists of individuals of various ages, backgrounds, and levels of experience with Hajj. Upon your arrival in Madinah, which marks your first entry into Saudi Arabia, tensions begin to rise among the group members due to a delay in receiving their baggage. The long waiting time and fatigue from the journey have added to their stress. The group looks to you for guidance in handling the situation and ensuring that their baggage is received. What would you do?

Helping Pilgrims with Accommodation Issues

A couple has been assigned separate accommodations and insists that they should be housed in the same room. They look to you for a resolution and are persistent in their request. How would you handle this situation?

Educating Pilgrims on Authentic Adahi Options

You notice that several pilgrims closely associated with you are discussing the availability of cheap Adahi (sacrificial animal) tokens in Makkah. They claim to have local connections that will ensure the slaughter is conducted in their presence, and they will also receive the meat afterward. They are encouraging other pilgrims to opt for this arrangement. How would you respond?

Guiding Pilgrims Amid Travel Restrictions

As the core Haj period approaches, a group of emotionally charged pilgrims from your location expresses their desire to travel to Taif to perform Umrah. Despite the Saudi authorities tightening security at checkpoints and requiring Nusuk cards and other official documents, they have arranged a cheap transport option with local bus operators. An advisory from Indian Haj Pilgrims Office (IHPO), Makkah instructs pilgrims to remain within Meeqat boundaries, yet this group urges you to join them as their guide. How would you respond?

Guiding a Lost Pilgrim Without Identification

You notice a pilgrim lost in the Haram who is under immense distress as they cannot connect with their co-pilgrims. They have lost their identity badge and all other documents that could help in their identification. The pilgrim cannot speak your language, but you are able to confirm that they are from India. How would you handle this situation?

Resolving Tensions Over Tent Arrangements

It is over 50°C in Mina, and this is the first day of Haj. Pilgrims have arrived by bus from Makkah after a long journey and are unhappy with the tent arrangements, as they are already crowded with early arrivals. They are frustrated, arguing, and eager to escalate their grievances. Some even want to take matters into their own hands. How would you respond?

Responding to a Transportation Breakdown

On the first day of movement from accommodation in Makkah to Mina, your bus breaks down midway near the Mina area. The bus driver is obligated to transport all the pilgrims together to their tent, as per Saudi authorities' regulations. However, the pilgrims grow restless, expressing their desire to proceed on foot, despite your concerns. You understand that finding the tents in Mina is not easy, and four hours have passed since you contacted Indian Haj Pilgrim Office for assistance. Meanwhile, some pilgrims begin blaming you for the chaos. How would you handle this situation?

Assisting Pilgrims Without NUSUK Cards

While walking through the streets of Aziziya after Zuhri prayer, you witness Saudi authorities questioning legitimate Indian Hajjis due to concerns about unauthorised pilgrims entering Makkah illegally to perform Hajj. The authorities ask for NUSUK cards, but the Moallim has yet to distribute them. The detained pilgrims are not from your state and are searching for the SHI of their respective state. The authorities have a vehicle ready to deport them outside Meeqat boundaries, and the Hajjis are visibly tense. How would you handle this situation?—

Managing Delays on the Journey to Mina

On the first day of movement from Makkah to Mina, the scheduled bus has not arrived, leaving the pilgrims—who are in the state of Ihram—anxious about missing their rituals in Mina. Despite your initial efforts to pacify them, they have now lost patience. How would you handle the situation effectively?

Managing Pilgrim Concerns During a Heatwave

An advisory has been issued for pilgrims during the days in Mina, after their retrain from Muzdalifa, instructing them to stay indoors during the afternoon due to an intense heat wave. While most pilgrims are resting in the camp, a small group of about a dozen individuals strongly opposes the restriction. They feel confined and want to challenge the Saudi authorities, questioning the grounds on which their movement is being restricted. You are overseeing the situation and need to ensure both their safety and order within the camp. How would you handle this situation?

Navigating Medical Challenges at Jamarat

At the Jamarat location, you come across a group of completely exhausted and dehydrated pilgrims in urgent need of medical assistance. Due to protocol restrictions, Indian ambulances cannot reach the site, and the Saudi authorities have limited ambulance availability. The Indian authorities expect you to bring the pilgrims to a designated location 2 km away so they can be transported to the 40-bed Indian hospital for treatment. However, the pilgrims are too weak to walk further. How would you manage the situation effectively?
